A Dictionary of Cinema Quotations From Filmmakers And Critics by Stephen Ringer. Not a movie quotes or snatches-of-dialogue book, this is instead an unparalleled source for the best quotations ever uttered by those involved in the filmmaking business. Brilliant observations and witticisms by Hollywood's best and brightest, covering over 100 years. Mostly zingers you've never heard before (where did Ringer find all these?!) Peerless in its selection, this book entertains, enlightens and illuminates like no other. A costly little commodity for its 207 pages, it makes up for it in the sheer quality of its 3,400 entries. A few worthy examples: "I always thought the actors were hired to ruin the writers' lives." - Robert Benton "Audiences attract dollars; stars attract audiences; characters attract stars." - David Geffner "Show business is high school plus money." - Stephen Spielberg "Hollywood never learns from its own failures, only other people's successes." - Robert Redford
The top tome on my movie book shelf.

Writers, critics, toastmasters and others involved in the film industry will find this book useful for supplying quotes from the industry's best. And the book's organization and index supply all the buttons to gain access to what you're looking for. But beware, all who are looking for a quickie quote. You'll open a page that's just your subject and come up for air hours later. The book might be great as a reference tool, but it's also wonderfully entertaining.

This compendium contains over 3400 quotations from filmmakers discussing their craft. Over 1850 film-related people are included and the quotes are arranged under a range of topics.

"Quite impressive compendium" -- -Classic Images "Recommended" -- -Reference User Services Quarterly "The best book of its kind ever published" -- -Images
